

Emergency Services Information Package (ESIP) and Tactical Fire Plans (TFP)

An Emergency Services Information Package (ESIP) and Tactical Fire Plans (TFP) is required where a facility has or will have a manifest quantity of hazardous chemicals in accordance with the WHS Regulations of NSW. An ESIP is also required where a facility has a fire control room, and fire engineering plays a key role in the detection and suppression of fires or hazardous material incidents.

The ESIP and TFP is effectively an evolution of the Emergency Management Plan. PRM ensure the EMP, ESIP and potentially Business Continuity Plans all speak to the same objectives and strategies, and flow from the initial emergency response to the handover to FRNSW, and then business impact assessments and continuity activities after site handover back to our client has occurred.

We look at a facility from a tactical perspective, considering:

- Fire detection and suppression systems
- Fuel loading and type/ size of hazardous chemicals
- Engineered features for the containment or expansion of potential emergencies
- Functions of the business and the ability for staff members to prevent-prepare and respond to likely emergencies

PRM will develop a plan which evolves the site EMP, to assist responding fire services to tactically use the features of the property to resolve fires or hazardous materials incidents offensively or defensively.

The ESIP also includes Tactical Fire Plan maps - which can be utilised day or night, providing key information to responding fire services, using language they understand with firefighter safety in mind.
